About:

Women human rights defenders lead movements that have swept the globe calling for gender equality and an end to gender-based violence against women, but also struggling for peace, social justice against corruption and protecting the environment. They have filled the streets, the airwaves, and the internet with their vigour and experiences, bringing to light facts truths that are too often veiled. They are raising their voices, frequently at great personal risk, to stand up for human rights and justice for all. Often these women are at the forefront of challenging social and cultural norms that limit women's human rights.

The current global context of unchecked authoritarianism as well as the rise of populism, the power of corporate greed and the influence of fundamentalist groups has accelerated closing the space for civil society to operate freely. States must live up to their commitments to protect women human rights defenders, who are increasingly under attack and inadequately protected.
